

Meeting of the International Council for the Study of Virus and Virus-like Diseases of the Grapevine (ICVG)

The ICVG is a non-profit scientific organization founded in 1964. The council organizes regular scientific meetings to promote research and international collaboration related to virus and virus-like diseases of grapevines.

Mission: About 70 Viruses or virus-like agents (viroids and phytoplasmas) are known to infect grapevine. Many of them cause disorders that reduce the plant vigour and longevity or the quality and quantity of the yield. Infected propagating material is largely responsible for the spread of these diseases among and within viticultural regions. Thus all efforts should be made to improve its sanitary conditions and to protect selected healthy clones from new infections.

The next international meeting will be held during the week of October 8, 2012 at the University of California, Davis. We are seeking donors who would be interested in helping making this a successful meeting. If you would be interested in making a donation, please feel free to use this form to send in a contribution or see 'Our thanks to our IVCG Supporters' on the website at: <http://ucanr.org/sites/ICVG/>
